Explore cutting-edge research on whales, primates and elephants as you think critically and write about the study of biology and other sciences. Do whales have a language and culture? Can elephants communicate over distances? Do emotions have a cellular component? What qualities and ethics are required to succeed as a scientist today? This class will explore all these issues and more in an active learning format. That means we'll venture out of the classroom, work collaboratively and cooperatively, teach each other what we've learned. The class promises provocative readings, hard work and fun!
