SHARPN YOUR CULINARY CHOPS

NEW COOKING SCHOOL LET'S COOK! SET TO SWING ITS DOORS OPEN TO LOCAL HOME CHEFS

BY ROBERT WATSON
AmericanSentinel.com

HOPPED — The Christmas Possibly surgery her husband to operate on her for 25 years, it was the opportunity of a lifetime. He was a chef and... (text continues)

PHOTO: Food Network chef and author Marcia Kiesel appears on "The Kitchen," a cooking show on the Food Network.

NEW YORK — The Food Network recently launched a new cooking show, "Let's Cook!" aimed at home chefs. The show, hosted by chef and author Marcia Kiesel, will air on the Food Network.

Kiesel, a former pastry chef and author of several cookbooks, has been working on the series for several years. The show features Kiesel demonstrating her cooking skills and sharing her tips and techniques with the home chefs.

The show will feature a variety of dishes, from simple weeknight meals to more complex creations. Kiesel will also be joined by a range of guests, including other chefs and food experts.

"Let's Cook!" is the latest in a series of shows that the Food Network has launched to appeal to home chefs. The network has also launched shows featuring celebrity chefs and cooking competitions.

Kiesel said she was excited to be a part of the show and to share her love of cooking with others.

"I've always loved cooking and sharing my recipes with others," she said. "I'm thrilled to be able to do that on a national level with "Let's Cook!""

The show's first episode features Kiesel demonstrating her skills in making a simple dish, followed by a segment where she shows home chefs how to make a more complex dish. The show also includes segments on baking and pastry making.

"I'm sure everyone will enjoy the show," Kiesel said. "I hope it inspires people to get into their kitchens and start cooking."