Battle lines drawn over how cash is split up

City, schools urge county to change redistribution

The battle over how to distribute cash from redevelopment is heating up. Santa Cruz City and San Lorenzo Valley School Districts are accusing each other of not playing fair.

The county was supposed to give each district their share of the money they paid into the redevelopment fund, but the state has yet to pay the county back. This has led to the districts accusing each other of not playing fair.

The district wants the county to pay them back, but the county is saying it can't until the state pays them back. The district is threatening to take the county to court, but the county is saying it will fight back.

The battle is expected to continue for some time, as both sides are determined to get their share of the money.
