San Francisco tight end Vernon Davis comes out of the tunnel prior to the 49ers game against the Buffalo Bills in October. The 49ers play the Baltimore Ravens today in Super Bowl XLVII.

Ex-Cabrillo coach is voice of game for KNBR

WHO’S GOT IT BETTER?

ONLY ONE HARBAUGH TEAM, 49ERS OR RAVENS, CAN ANSWER ‘NOBODY’ AFTER TODAY
San Francisco tight end Vernon Davis comes out of the tunnel prior to the 49ers game against the Buffalo Bills in October. The 49ers play the Baltimore Ravens today in Super Bowl XLVII.

In the two hours of Friday morning in party central, aka New Orleans on Super Bowl week, and former San Francisco 49ers cornerback Eric Davis is sleeping. This 36-year-old bookish kid has had too much. The self-proclaimed night owl is just exhausted, but he's not. The 45-year-old looks sipping coffee. He’s catching his second wind. The 49ers corner back Eric Davis is on the set of NFL Network’s “NFL AM,” a four-hour show that runs weekdays beginning at 3 a.m. This past week, he and his colleagues have been previewing Super Bowl XLVII, which today will pit the San Francisco 49ers against the Baltimore Ravens.

The Ravens have seen the read-option offense before, back when they faced the Redskins and Robert Griffin III nearly two months ago. The result? A 30-24 win for the Redskins. While the Ravens have made changes, the 49ers’ offense is similar, and defense are be prepared for the “Skins’. The game will come down to a constant guessing game for the Ravens’ defenses, wondering if Colin Kaepernick will hand it off or keep it for himself.

The 49ers, that’s the kind of game the Ravens thrive in. Unfortunately for the Ravens underdogs, Ravens on run.

The Ravens have seen the read-option offense before, back when they faced the Redskins and Robert Griffin III nearly two months ago. The result? A 30-24 win for the Ravens. While the Ravens have made changes, the 49ers’ offense is similar, and defense are be prepared for the “Skins’. The game will come down to a constant guessing game for the Ravens’ defenses, wondering if Colin Kaepernick will hand it off or keep it for himself.
CURLY WALKER / The Associated Press

Cujo, a mixed-breed dog, was the Violet-colored Malamute Chihuahua mix that belonged to the late Kansas City Chiefs quarterback Len Dawson. Cujo was Dawson's lifelong companion and a constant presence in his life at home and on the road.

Dawson's family and the Kansas City Chiefs announced Cujo's passing on Thursday, Aug. 25, 2022. Cujo was 14 years old.

"We are heartbroken by the loss of our family member, and we ask for the support of our fans and friends as we grieve the passing of our beloved companion, Cujo," the Chiefs said in a statement.

Cujo was Dawson's faithful companion during his NFL career, accompanying him on road trips and even appearing on the sidelines at Chiefs games. Cujo's name was said to be an abbreviation of "Cujo Dawson," and he was often seen wearing a football jersey with Dawson's name and number on it.

In his later years, Cujo was retired to a life of leisure and comfort, often spending time with his family and their other pets. Dawson's family had announced in the past that Cujo was a much-loved member of their family and that they would honor him for his loyalty and companionship.

Cujo's passing has been mourned by many, with tributes being shared on social media and in the media. Dawson's family has requested privacy during this difficult time and has asked for donations in Cujo's honor to be made to a local animal shelter in Kansas City.

Cujo's legacy as a beloved pet and lifelong companion to Len Dawson continues to be celebrated by those who knew him and loved him.